

Nos. 03-343, 03-334, XX-XXX

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

KHALED A. F. AL ODAH ET AL.,
Petitioners,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, ET AL.,
Respondents.

SHAFIQ RASUL ET AL.,
Petitioners,

v.

GEORGE W. BUSH, ET AL.,
Respondents.

YASIR ESAM HAMDI,
Petitioner,

v.

DONALD RUMSFELD,
Respondent.

On Petitions for Writs of Certiorari to the United States Courts of Appeals for the District of Columbia
Circuit and the Fourth Circuit

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE FRED KOREMATSU IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONERS

GEOFFREY R. STONE
DAVID A. STRAUSS*
1111 East 60th Street
Chicago, IL 60637
(773) 702-4907

STEPHEN J. SCHULHOFER
40 Washington Sq. So.
New York, NY 10012

*Counsel of Record

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Pages
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES.....
iii
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.....	1
ARGUMENT.....	2
I. Time and Again, in Periods of Real or Perceived Crisis, the United States Has Unnecessarily Restricted Civil Liberties.....	4
A. The Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798....	4
B. The Civil War: The Suspension of Habeas Corpus	7
C. World War I: The Espionage Act of 1917	8
D. The Red Scare: 1919-1920.....
11
E. World War II: Internment.....	12
F. The Cold War: Loyalty Oaths and McCarthyism.....	16
II. To Avoid a Repetition of Past Mistakes, this Court should Closely Scrutinize the Government’s Claims of “Military Necessity” in these Cases to Ensure that Civil Liberties are not Unnecessarily Restricted	19
CONCLUSION.....
21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

	Pages
Abrams v. United States , 250 U.S. 616 (1919)	10
Adler v. Bd. of Educ. , 342 U.S. 485 (1952)....	18
Barenblatt v. United States , 360 U.S. 109 (1949)	18
Brandenburg v. Ohio , 395 U.S. 44 (1969)....	10,11,18
Communist Party v. Subversive Activities Control Bd. , 367 U.S. 1 (1961).....	18
Debs v. United States , 249 U.S. 211 (1919)..	10
Dennis v. United States , 341 U.S. 494 (1951)	17-18
Elfbrandt v. Russell , 384 U.S. 11 (1966).....	17
Hirabayashi v. United States , 320 U.S. 81 (1943)	13
Hirabayashi v. United States , 828 F.2d 591 (9 th Cir.1987).....	15
Korematsu v. United States , 323 U.S. 214 (1944).....	1,13-14
Korematsu v. United States , 584 F. Supp. 1406 (N.D. Cal. 1984).....	15
Ex Parte Milligan , 4 Wall. (71 U.S.) 2 (1966)	7-8
New York Times v. Sullivan , 376 U.S. 254 (1964)	6
Schenck v. United States , 249 U.S. 27 (1919)	10
Yasui v. United States , 320 U.S. 114 (1943)	13
Yates v. United States , 354 U.S. 298 (1957)	18

OTHER

8 Annals of Congress 2006-11 (Gales and Seaton 1851).....	6
26 th Cong., 1st Sess., Doc. 86, House Rep.....	6
64 Stat. 987, 50 U.S.C. § 67.....	16
68 Stat. 775, 50 U.S.C. § 841.....	17

102 Stat. 903, Public Law 100-383 (Aug. 10, 1988) (codified at 50 U.S.C. § 1989(b) (1996)).....	16
Act of June 15, 1917, ch. 30, tit. I, § 3, 40 Stat. 219.....	8
Act of May 16, 1918, ch. 75, 40 Stat. 553.....	10
Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 645, 62 Stat. 765 (codified as 18 U.S.C. § 1383 (1974) (repealed 1976)).....	12
Charles Francis Adams, ed., The Words of John Adams (Boston: Little, Brown, 1854).....	5
Roy P. Basler, ed., The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln (New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 1956).....	7
Ralph S. Brown, Loyalty and Security (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1958).....	17
David Cauter, The Great Fear: The Anti- Communist Purge under Truman and Eisenhower (New York: Simon and Schuster, 1978).....	17, 18
Zechariah Chafee, Free Speech in the United States (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1941).....	9
Christian Science Monitor (June 25, 1920).....	12
Cong. Globe, 26 th Cong, 1 st Sess. 411 (May 23, 1840).....	6
Cong. Rec. 66 th Cong., 2d Sess. 293-94 (Dec. 13, 1920).....	10
Frank Donner, The Age of Surveillance: The Aims and Methods of America's Political Intelligence System (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1980).....	17
Executive Order No 9066, 7 Fed. Reg. 1407 (1942).....	12

Daniel Farber, Lincoln's Constitution (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2003).....	7
“Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer on Charges Made Against Department of Justice by Louis F. Post and Others,” Hearings before the Comm. on Rules, House of Representatives 27 (1920).....	11
House of Representatives 27 (1920).....	11
Irving Howe, “The Shame of U.S. Liberalism,” 1 Dissent 308 (Autumn, 1954).....	17
Dennis J. Hutchinson, “ The Achilles Heel of the Constitution: Justice Jackson and the Japanese Exclusion Cases , 2002 Sup. Ct. Rev. 455.....	16
Harry Kalven, Jr., A Worthy Tradition: Freedom of Speech in America (New York: Harper & Row, 1988).....	10,17
Tetsuden Kashima, Judgment without Trial: Japanese American Imprisonment during World War II (Seattle: University of Washington Press, 2003).....	13
David M. Kennedy, Over Here: The First World War and American Society (New York: Oxford University Press, 1980)...	8
Richard H. Kohn, Eagle and Sword: The Federalists and the Creation of the Military Establishment in America, 1783-1802 (New York: Free Press, 1975).....	5
Max Lowenthal, The Federal Bureau of Investigation (New York: Sloane, 1950).....	12
John C. Miller, Crisis in Freedom: The Alien and Sedition Acts (Boston: Little, Brown, 1951).....	6
Paul L. Murphy, World War I and the Origin of Civil Liberties in the United States (New York: Norton, 1979).....	8

Robert K. Murray, Red Scare: A Study in National Hysteria, 1919-1920 , (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1955).....	11
National Popular Government League, Report upon the Illegal Practices of the United States Department of Justice (1920).....	12
Mark E. Neely, Jr., The Fate of Liberty: Abraham Lincoln and Civil Liberties (New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1991).....	7
New York Times (Nov. 21, 1917).....	9
New York Times (Sept 21, 1950).....	16
John Lord O'Brian, New Encroachments on Individual Freedom , 66 Harv L Rev 1 (1952).	18
John Lord O'Brian, Changing Attitudes toward Freedom , 9 Wash & Lee L Rev 157 (1952)...	18
Presidential Proclamation 4417, "An American Promise," February 19, 1976.....	14
The Public Statutes at Large of the United States of America (Boston: Little, Brown, 1845).....	5,6
William H. Rehnquist, All the Laws But One: Civil Liberties in Wartime (New York: Vintage Books, 1998).....	7,8,20
Report of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, Personal Justice Denied (Washington D.C.: Government Printing Office, June 1983).....	13,15
Harry N Scheiber, The Wilson Administration and Civil Liberties: 1917-1921 (Ithaca: Cornell University Press, 1960).....	9
James Rogers Sharp, American Politics in the Early Republic: The New Nation in Crisis (New Haven: Yale, 1993).....	5

James Morton Smith, Freedom's Fetters: The Alien and Sedition Laws and American Civil Liberties (Ithaca: Cornell University Press, 1956).....	6
Geoffrey R. Stone, Learned Hand and the Espionage Act of 1917: A Mystery Unraveled , 70 U. Chi. L. Rev. 335 (2003).....	8
Geoffrey R. Stone, The Origins of the "Bad Tendency Test": Free Speech in Wartime , 2003 Sup. Ct. Rev. 411.....	8
Athan Theoharis, Spying on Americans: Political Surveillance from Hoover to the Huston Plan (Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1978).....	17
William M. Wiecek, The Legal Foundations of Domestic Anticommunism: The Background of Dennis v. United States , 2001 Sup Ct Rev 375...	18
Eric K. Yamamoto, et al., Race, Rights and Reparation: Law and the Japanese American Internment (Gaithersburg, Md.: Aspen, 2001).....	14
Eric K. Yamamoto and Susan Kiyomi Serrano, The Loaded Weapon , 29 Amerasia Journal 51 (2002).....	15

INTEREST OF *AMICUS CURIAE*¹

More than sixty years ago, as a young man, Fred Korematsu challenged the constitutionality of President Franklin Roosevelt's 1942 Executive Order that authorized the internment of all persons of Japanese ancestry on the West Coast of the United States. He was convicted and sent to prison. In Korematsu v. United States,² this Court upheld his conviction, explaining that because the United States was at war the government could constitutionally intern Mr. Korematsu, without a hearing, and without any adjudicative determination that he had done anything wrong.

More than half-a-century later, Fred Korematsu was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian honor, for his courage and persistence in opposing injustice. In accepting this award, Mr. Korematsu reminded the nation that "We should be vigilant to make sure this will never happen again." He has committed himself to ensuring that Americans do not forget the lessons of their own history.

Because Mr. Korematsu has a distinctive, indeed, unique, perspective on the issues presented by this case, he submits this brief to assist the Court in its deliberations.

¹ This brief is filed with the written consent of all parties. No counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part, nor did any party make a monetary contribution to the preparation or submission of this brief. Filing and printing costs were paid by the MacArthur Justice Center at The University of Chicago Law School.

² 323 U.S. 214 (1944).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Petitioners in these cases have been deprived of their liberty for extended periods of time without any opportunity for a fair hearing before a competent tribunal to determine whether there is any factual or legal basis for their confinement and without any assistance of counsel. Unlike Fred Korematsu, who was at least permitted to challenge in court the constitutionality of his internment, the Petitioners have been denied even that fundamental right. The United States insists that this denial of even minimal due process is constitutional and federal courts lack jurisdiction to review that determination because the United States is at war.

Although the specific legal issues presented in these cases differ from those the United States has faced in the past, the extreme nature of the government's position is all-too-familiar. It may be that it is essential in some circumstances to compromise civil liberties in order to meet the necessities of wartime, but history teaches that we tend too quickly to sacrifice these liberties in the face of overbroad claims of military necessity. Fred Korematsu's experience is but one example, of many.

In this instance, the claim, accepted by the courts below, that the government may detain individuals indefinitely without any fair hearing overreaches the bounds of military necessity. To avoid repeating the mistakes of the past, this Court should make clear that the United States respects fundamental constitutional and human rights – even in time of war.

ARGUMENT

Since September 11th, the United States has taken significant steps to ensure the nation's safety. It is only natural that in times of crisis our government should tighten the measures it ordinarily takes to preserve our security. But we know from long experience that we often react too harshly in circumstances of felt necessity and underestimate the damage to civil liberties. Typically, we come later to regret our excesses, but for many that recognition comes too late. The challenge is to identify excess when it occurs and to protect constitutional rights before they are compromised unnecessarily. These cases provide the Court with the opportunity to protect constitutional liberties when they matter most, rather than belatedly, years after the fact.

As Fred Korematsu's life story demonstrates, our history merits attention. Only by understanding the errors of the past can we do better in the present. Six examples illustrate the nature and magnitude of the challenge: the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798, the suspension of habeas corpus during the Civil War, the prosecution of dissenters during World War I, the Red Scare of 1919-1920, the internment of 120,000 individuals of Japanese descent during World War II, and the era of loyalty oaths and McCarthyism during the Cold War.

I. TIME AND AGAIN, IN PERIODS OF REAL OR PERCEIVED CRISIS, THE UNITED STATES HAS UNNECESSARILY RESTRICTED CIVIL LIBERTIES

History teaches that, in time of war, we have often sacrificed fundamental freedoms unnecessarily. The Executive and Legislative Branches, reflecting public opinion formed in the heat of the moment, frequently have overestimated the need to restrict civil liberties and failed to consider alternative ways to protect the national security. Courts, which are not immune to the demands of public opinion, have too often deferred to exaggerated claims of military necessity and failed to insist that measures curtailing constitutional rights be carefully justified and narrowly tailored. In retrospect, it is clear that judges and justices should have scrutinized these claims more closely and done more to ensure that essential security measures did not unnecessarily impair individual freedoms and the traditional separation of powers.

A. THE ALIEN AND SEDITION ACTS OF 1798

In 1798, the United States found itself embroiled in a European war that then raged between France and England. A bitter political and philosophical debate divided the Federalists, who favored the English, and the Republicans, who favored the French. The Federalists were then in power, and the administration of President John Adams initiated a sweeping series of defense measures that brought the United States into a state of undeclared war with France.³

³ James Rogers Sharp, American Politics in the Early Republic: The New Nation in Crisis 5 (New Haven: Yale, 1993); Richard H. Kohn, Eagle and Sword: The Federalists and the Creation of

The Republicans opposed these measures, leading Federalists to accuse them of disloyalty. President Adams, for example, declared that the Republicans “would sink the glory of our country and prostrate her liberties at the feet of France.”⁴ Against this backdrop, and in a mood of patriotic fervor, the Federalists enacted the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798.

The Alien Friends Act empowered the President to deport any non-citizen he judged to be dangerous to the peace and safety of the United States. The Act applied to citizens or subjects of nations with whom we were not in a state of declared war. The Act accorded individuals detained under the Act no right to a hearing, no right to present evidence and no right to judicial review.⁵ Congressman Edward Livingston aptly observed in opposition to the Act that with “no indictment; no jury; no trial; no public procedure; no statement of the accusation; no examination of the witnesses in its support; no counsel for defence; all is darkness, silence, mystery, and suspicion.”⁶ The Alien Friends Act expired on the final day of President Adams’s term of office, and has never been renewed.

the Military Establishment in America, 1783-1802 195 (New York: Free Press, 1975).

⁴ Letter from John Adams to the Inhabitants of Arlington and Bandgate, Vermont, June 25, 1798, in Charles Francis Adams, ed., 9 The Words of John Adams 202 (Boston: Little, Brown, 1854).

⁵ See An Act Concerning Aliens, 5th Cong., 2d Sess., in 1 The Public Statutes at Large of the United States of America 570-72 (Boston: Little, Brown, 1845). The Alien Enemies Act, which was adopted at the same time, provided that, in the case of a declared war, citizens or subjects of an enemy nation residing in the United States could be apprehended, detained and either confined or expelled at the direction of the President. This Act has remained a permanent part of American wartime policy.

⁶ 8 Annals of Congress 2006-11 (Gales and Seaton 1851).

The Sedition Act of 1798 prohibited criticism of the government, the Congress or the President, with the intent to bring them into contempt or disrepute.⁷ The Act was vigorously enforced, but only against supporters of the Republican Party. Prosecutions were brought against every influential Republican newspaper and the most vocal critics of the Adams administration.⁸

The Sedition Act also expired on the last day of Adams's term of office. The new President, Thomas Jefferson, pardoned those who had been convicted under the Act, and forty years later Congress repaid all the fines.⁹ The Sedition Act was a critical factor in the demise of the Federalist Party, and the Supreme Court has often reminded us in the years since that the Sedition Act of 1798 has been judged unconstitutional in the "court of history."¹⁰

B. THE CIVIL WAR: THE SUSPENSION OF HABEAS CORUPS

During the Civil War, the nation faced its most serious challenge. There were sharply divided loyalties, fluid military and political boundaries, and easy opportunities for espionage and sabotage. In such circumstances, and in the face of widespread and often bitter opposition to the war, the draft and ⁷ See An Act for the Punishment of Certain Crimes against the United States, 5th Cong., 2d Sess., in 1 Public Statutes at Large 596-97.

⁸ See John C. Miller, Crisis in Freedom: The Alien and Sedition Acts (Boston: Little, Brown, 1951); James Morton Smith, Freedom's Fetters: The Alien and Sedition Laws and American Civil Liberties (Ithaca: Cornell University Press, 1956).

⁹ Cong. Globe, 26th Cong, 1st Sess. 411 (May 23, 1840). See 26th Cong., 1st Sess., Doc. 86, House Rep.

¹⁰ See, e.g., New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 276 (1964).

the Emancipation Proclamation, President Lincoln had to balance the conflicting interests of military necessity and individual liberty.

During the course of the war, Lincoln suspended the writ of habeas corpus on eight separate occasions. Some of these orders were more warranted than others. The most extreme of the suspensions, which applied throughout the entire nation, declared that “all persons. . . guilty of any disloyal practice . . . shall be subject to court martial.”¹¹ Under this authority, military officers arrested and imprisoned as many as 38,000 civilians, with no judicial proceedings and no judicial review.¹²

In 1866, a year after the war ended, the Supreme Court ruled in *Ex parte Milligan*¹³ that Lincoln had exceeded his constitutional authority, and held that the President could not constitutionally suspend the writ of habeas corpus, even in time of war, if the ordinary civil courts were open and functioning. As Chief Justice Rehnquist has observed, Milligan “is justly celebrated for its rejection of the government’s position that the Bill of Rights has no application in wartime.”¹⁴

¹¹ Roy P. Basler, ed., 5 The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln 436-437 (New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 1956).

¹² See Daniel Farber, Lincoln’s Constitution (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2003); Mark E. Neely, Jr., The Fate of Liberty: Abraham Lincoln and Civil Liberties (New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1991); William H. Rehnquist, All the Laws But One: Civil Liberties in Wartime (New York: Vintage Books, 1998).

¹³ 4 Wall. (71 U.S.) 2 (1866).

¹⁴ William H Rehnquist, All the Laws But One: Civil Liberties in Wartime 137 (New York: Vintage Books, 1998).

C. WORLD WAR I: THE ESPIONAGE ACT OF 1917

When the United States entered World War I, there was widespread opposition to both the war and the draft. Many citizens argued that our goal was not to “make the world safe for democracy,” but to protect the investments of the wealthy, and that this cause was not worth the life of one American soldier.

President Wilson had little patience for such dissent. He warned that disloyalty “must be crushed out” of existence¹⁵ and declared that disloyalty “was . . . not a subject on which there was room for . . . debate.” Disloyal individuals, he explained, “had sacrificed their right to civil liberties.”¹⁶

Shortly after the United States entered the war, Congress enacted the Espionage Act of 1917.¹⁷ Although the Act was not directed at dissent as such, aggressive federal prosecutors and compliant federal judges soon transformed the Act into a blanket prohibition of seditious utterance.¹⁸ The Wilson administration’s intent was made clear in November 1917 when Attorney General Charles Gregory, referring to war dissenters, announced: “May God have mercy on them, for they need expect none from an outraged people and an avenging government.”¹⁹

¹⁵ Woodrow Wilson, “Third Annual Message to Congress,” quoted in David M. Kennedy, Over Here: The First World War and American Society 24 (New York: Oxford University Press, 1980).

¹⁶ Quoted in Paul L. Murphy, World War I and the Origin of Civil Liberties in the United States 53 (New York: Norton, 1979).

¹⁷ Act of June 15, 1917, ch. 30, tit. I, § 3, 40 Stat. 219.

¹⁸ See Geoffrey R. Stone, Learned Hand and the Espionage Act of 1917: A Mystery Unraveled, 70 U. Chi. L. Rev. 335 (2003); Geoffrey R. Stone, The Origins of the “Bad Tendency Test”: Free Speech in Wartime, 2003 Sup. Ct. Rev. 411

¹⁹ New York Times 3 (Nov. 21, 1917).

In fact, the government worked hard to create an “outraged people.” Because there had been no direct attack on the United States, and no direct threat to our national security, the Wilson administration had to generate a sense of urgency and a mood of anger in order to exhort Americans to enlist, to contribute money, and to make the many sacrifices that war demands. To this end, Wilson established the Committee for Public Information, which produced a flood of inflammatory and often misleading pamphlets, news releases, speeches, editorials, and motion pictures, all designed to instill a hatred of all things German and of all persons whose “loyalty” might be open to doubt.²⁰

The government prosecuted more than 2,000 dissenters for expressing their opposition to the war or the draft, and in an atmosphere of fear, hysteria and clamor, most judges were quick to mete out severe punishment – often 10 to 20 years in prison – to those deemed disloyal. The result was the suppression of all genuine debate about the merits, morality and progress of the war.²¹ But even this was not enough. Less than a year after adopting the Espionage Act, Congress enacted the Sedition Act of 1918, which declared it unlawful for any person to publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language intended to cause contempt or scorn for the form of government, the Constitution, or the flag of the United States.²²

The story of the Supreme Court in this era is too familiar, and too painful, to bear repeating in detail.

²⁰ See Harry N Scheiber, The Wilson Administration and Civil Liberties: 1917-1921 16-17 (Ithaca: Cornell University Press, 1960).

²¹ See Zechariah Chafee, Free Speech in the United States 52 (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1941)

²² Act of May 16, 1918, ch. 75, § 1, 40 Stat. 553.

In a series of decisions in 1919 and 1920 – most notably Schenck,²³ Debs,²⁴ and *Abrams*²⁵ – the Court consistently upheld the convictions of individuals who had agitated against the war and the draft – individuals as obscure as Mollie Steimer, a twenty-year-old Russian-Jewish émigré who had thrown anti-war leaflets written in Yiddish from a rooftop on the lower East Side of New York, and as prominent as Eugene Debs, who had received almost a million votes in 1912 as the Socialist Party candidate for President. As Harry Kalven once observed, the Court’s performance was “simply wretched.”²⁶

In December 1920, after all the dust had settled, Congress quietly repealed the Sedition Act of 1918.²⁷ Between 1919 and 1923, the government released from prison every individual who had been convicted under the Espionage and Sedition Acts. A decade later, President Roosevelt granted amnesty to all of these individuals, restoring their full political and civil rights. Over the next half-century, the Supreme Court overruled every one of its World War I decisions, implicitly acknowledging that the individuals who had been imprisoned for their dissent in this era had been punished for speech that should have been protected by the First Amendment.²⁸

D. THE RED SCARE: 1919-1920

The Russian Revolution generated deep anxiety in the United States. A series of violent strikes and ²³ Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47 (1919).

²⁴ Debs v. United States, 249 U.S. 211 (1919).

²⁵ Abrams v. United States, 250 U.S. 616 (1919).

²⁶ Harry Kalven, Jr., A Worthy Tradition: Freedom of Speech in America 147 (New York: Harper & Row, 1988).

²⁷ Cong. Rec. 66th Cong., 2d Ses.s 293-94 (Dec. 13, 1920).

²⁸ See Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444 (1969).

spectacular bombings triggered the period of public paranoia that became known as the “Red Scare” of 1919-1920. Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer announced that the bombings were an “attempt on the part of radical elements to rule the country.”²⁹

Palmer established the “General Intelligence Division” within the Bureau of Investigation and appointed J. Edgar Hoover to gather and coordinate information about radical activities. The GID unleashed a horde of undercover agents to infiltrate radical organizations. From November 1919 to January 1920, the GID conducted a series of raids in thirty-three cities. More than 5,000 people were arrested on suspicion of radicalism. Attorney General Palmer described the “alien filth” captured in these raids as creatures with “sly and crafty eyes, lopsided faces, sloping brows and misshapen features” whose minds were tainted by “cupidity, cruelty, and crime.”³⁰ More than a thousand individuals were summarily deported.

In the spring of 1920, a group of distinguished lawyers and law professors, including Ernst Freund, Felix Frankfurter and Roscoe Pound, published a report on the activities of the Department of Justice, which carefully documented that the government had acted without legal authorization and without complying with the minimum standards of due process.³¹ This report marked the beginning of the end of this era. As the Christian Science Monitor

²⁹ Quoted in Robert K. Murray, Red Scare: A Study in National Hysteria, 1919-1920, 9 (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1955).

³⁰ “Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer on Charges Made Against Department of Justice by Louis F. Post and Others,” Hearings before the Comm. on Rules, House of Representatives 27 (1920).

³¹ See National Popular Government League, Report upon the Illegal Practices of the United States Department of Justice (1920).

observed in June 1920, “in the light of what is now known, it seems clear that what appeared to be an excess of radicalism” was met with a real “excess of suppression.”³² In 1924, Attorney General Harlan Fiske Stone ordered an end to the Bureau of Investigation’s surveillance of political radicals. “A secret police,” he explained, is “a menace to free government and free institutions.”³³

E. WORLD WAR II: INTERNMENT

On December 7, 1941, Japan attacked Pearl Harbor. Two months later, on February 19, 1942, President Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066, which authorized the Army to “designate military areas” from which “any persons may be excluded.”³⁴ Although the words “Japanese” or “Japanese American” never appeared in the Order, it was understood to apply only to persons of Japanese ancestry.

Over the next eight months, 120,000 individuals of Japanese descent were forced to leave their homes in California, Washington, Oregon and Arizona. Two-thirds of these individuals were American citizens, representing almost 90% of all Japanese-Americans. No charges were brought against these individuals; there were no hearings; they did not know where they were going, how long they would be detained, what conditions they would face, or what fate would await them. Many families lost everything.

³² Christian Science Monitor (June 25, 1920).

³³ Quoted in Max Lowenthal, The Federal Bureau of Investigation 298 (New York: Sloane, 1950).

³⁴ Executive Order No 9066, 7 Fed. Reg. 1407 (1942). On March 21, 1942, Congress implicitly ratified the Executive Order by providing that violation of the order of a military commander was unlawful. Act of June 25, 1948, ch. 645, 62 Stat. 765 (codified as 18 U.S.C. § 1383 (1974) (repealed 1976)).

On the orders of military police, these individuals were transported to one of ten internment camps, which were located in isolated areas in wind-swept deserts or vast swamp lands. Men, women and children were placed in overcrowded rooms with no furniture other than cots. They found themselves surrounded by barbed wire and military police, and there they remained for three years.³⁵

In Korematsu v. United States,³⁶ this Court, in a six-to-three decision, upheld the President's action. The Court offered the following explanation:³⁷

[We] are not unmindful of the hardships imposed . . . upon a large group of American citizens. But hardships are part of war, and war is an aggregation of hardships. . . .

Korematsu was not excluded from the [West Coast] because of hostility to . . . his race, [but] because . . . the military authorities . . . decided that the [] urgency of the situation demanded that all citizens of Japanese ancestry be segregated from the [area]. . . . We cannot – by availing ourselves of the calm perspective of hindsight – say that these actions were unjustified.

³⁵ See Report of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, Personal Justice Denied (Washington D.C.: Government Printing Office, June 1983); Tetsuden Kashima, Judgment without Trial: Japanese American Imprisonment during World War II (Seattle: University of Washington Press, 2003).

³⁶ 323 U.S. 214 (1944). See also Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81 (1943) (upholding the constitutionality of the curfew order); Yasui v. United States, 320 U.S. 114 (1943) (same).

³⁷ 323 U.S. at 219-20, 223-24.

On February 19, 1976, as part of the celebration of the Bicentennial of the Constitution, President Gerald Ford issued Presidential Proclamation 4417, in which he acknowledged that, in the spirit of celebrating our Constitution, we must recognize “our national mistakes as well as our national achievements.” “February 19th,” he noted, “is the anniversary of a sad day in American history,” for it was “on that date in 1942 . . . that Executive Order 9066 was issued.” President Ford observed that “we now know what we should have known then” – that the evacuation and internment of these individuals was “wrong.” Ford concluded by calling “upon the American people to affirm with me this American Promise – that we have learned from the tragedy of that long-ago experience” and “resolve that this kind of action shall never again be repeated.”³⁸

In 1980, Congress established the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians to review the implementation of Executive Order 9066. The Commission was composed of former members of Congress, the Supreme Court and the Cabinet, as well as distinguished private citizens. In 1983, the Commission unanimously concluded that the factors that shaped the internment decision “were race prejudice, war hysteria and a failure of political leadership,” rather than military necessity.³⁹

³⁸ Presidential Proclamation 4417, “An American Promise,” February 19, 1976, quoted in Eric K. Yamamoto, et al., Race, Rights and Reparation: Law and the Japanese American Internment 400 (Gaithersburg, Md.: Aspen, 2001).

³⁹ Report of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, Personal Justice Denied 5, 8 (Washington D.C.: Government Printing Office, June 1983).

Shortly thereafter, lower federal courts granted extraordinary writs of coram nobis in the Korematsu and Hirabayashi cases, finding that government officials had known at the time of the internment decision that there had been no military necessity and that government officials had intentionally deceived the Supreme Court about this state of affairs.⁴⁰

In vacating Fred Korematsu's forty-year-old conviction because it was the result of "manifest injustice," Federal District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel emphasized the need for both executive branch accountability and careful judicial review:⁴¹

[Korematsu] stands as a constant caution that in times of war or declared military necessity our institutions must be vigilant in protecting constitutional guarantees. It stands as a caution that in times of distress the shield of military necessity and national security must not be used to protect governmental actions from close scrutiny and accountability. . . .

In 1988, President Reagan signed the Civil Liberties Restoration Act, which officially declared the Japanese internment a "grave injustice" that had been "carried out without adequate security reasons," and offered a formal presidential apology and reparations to each of the Japanese-American internees who had suffered discrimination, loss of ⁴⁰ Korematsu v. United States, 584 F. Supp. 1406, 1420 (N.D. Cal. 1984). Gordon Hirabayashi also successfully filed a petition for a writ of coram nobis. See Hirabayashi v. United States, 828 F.2d 591 (9th Cir. 1987). See also Eric K. Yamamoto and Susan Kiyomi Serrano, The Loaded Weapon, 29 Amerasia Journal 51 (2002).

⁴¹ Korematsu, 584 F. Supp. at 1420.

liberty, loss of property, and personal humiliation because of the actions of the United States government.⁴² This Court's decision in Korematsu has become a constitutional pariah. The Supreme Court has never cited it with approval of its result.⁴³

F. THE COLD WAR: LOYALTY OATHS AND MCCARTHYISM

As World War II drew to a close, the nation moved almost seamlessly into the Cold War. With the glow of our wartime alliance with the Soviet Union evaporating, President Truman came under increasing attack by those who sought to exploit fears of Communist aggression. The issue of "loyalty" quickly became a shuttlecock of party politics. By 1948, President Truman was boasting on the stump that he had imposed on the federal civil service the most extreme loyalty program in the "Free World."⁴⁴

But there were limits to Truman's anti-communism. In 1950, he vetoed the McCarran Act, which required the registration of all Communists. Truman explained that the Act was the product of "public hysteria" and would lead to "witch hunts."⁴⁵ Congress passed the Act over Truman's veto.⁴⁶

In 1954, Congress enacted the Communist Control Act,⁴⁷ which stripped the Communist Party

⁴² 102 Stat. 903, Public Law 100-383 (Aug. 10, 1988) (codified at 50 U.S.C. § 1989(b) (1996)).

⁴³ See Dennis J. Hutchinson, "The Achilles Heel" of the Constitution: Justice Jackson and the Japanese Exclusion Cases, 2002 Sup Ct Rev 455, 485 n 99.

⁴⁴ See David Caute, The Great Fear: The Anti-Communist Purge under Truman and Eisenhower 15-33 (New York: Simon and Schuster 1978).

⁴⁵ New York Times (Sept 21, 1950).

⁴⁶ 64 Stat. 987, 50 U.S.C. § 67.

⁴⁷ 68 Stat. 775, 50 U.S.C. § 841.

of “all rights, privileges, and immunities.” Only one Senator, Estes Kefauver, dared to vote against it. Irving Howe lamented “this Congressional stampede to . . . trample . . . liberty in the name of destroying its enemy.”⁴⁸

Hysteria over the “Red Menace” swept the nation and generated a wide range of federal, state and local restrictions on free expression and free association, including extensive loyalty programs for government employees; emergency detention plans for alleged “subversives”; abusive legislative investigations designed to punish by exposure; public and private blacklists of those who had been “exposed”; and criminal prosecutions of the leaders and members of the Communist Party of the United States.⁴⁹

This Court’s response was mixed. The key decision was Dennis v. United States,⁵⁰ which involved the direct prosecution under the Smith Act of the leaders of the American Communist Party. The Court held that the defendants could constitutionally be punished for their speech under the clear and present danger standard – even though the danger was neither clear nor present. It was a memorable feat of judicial legerdemain.⁵¹

⁴⁸ Irving Howe, “The Shame of U.S. Liberalism,” 1 Dissent 308 (Autumn, 1954).

⁴⁹ See generally Ralph S. Brown, Loyalty and Security (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1958); Cauter, supra note 43; Frank Donner, The Age of Surveillance: The Aims and Methods of America’s Political Intelligence System (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1980); Athan Theoharis, Spying on Americans: Political Surveillance from Hoover to the Huston Plan (Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1978).

⁵⁰ 341 U.S. 494 (1951).

⁵¹ See Harry Kalven, Jr., A Worthy Tradition: Freedom of Speech in America 211 (New York: Harper & Row, 1988); William M. Wiecek, The Legal Foundations of Domestic Anticommunism: The Background of Dennis v. United States, 2001 Sup. Ct. Rev. 375.

Over the next several years, the Court upheld far-reaching legislative investigations of “subversive” organizations and individuals and the exclusion of members of the Communist Party from the bar, the ballot and public employment.⁵² In so doing, the Court clearly put its stamp of approval on an array of actions we look back on today as models of McCarthyism. In later years, the Court effectively overruled Dennis and its progeny, recognizing once again that the nation had been led astray by the emotions and fears of the moment.⁵³

II. TO AVOID A REPETITION OF PAST MISTAKES, THIS COURT SHOULD CLOSELY SCRUTINIZE THE GOVERNMENT’S CLAIMS OF “MILITARY NECESSITY” IN THESE CASES TO ENSURE THAT CIVIL LIBERTIES ARE NOT UNNECESSARILY RESTRICTED

As in past episodes, the issues raised in these cases involve a direct conflict between our most precious civil liberties and a threat to our safety and security. That we have made mistakes in the past does not mean we should make mistakes in the present. We should learn from our experience.

During World War I, John Lord O’Brian served as Special Assistant Attorney General in charge of the War Emergency Division of the Department of ⁵² See, e.g., Communist Party v. Subversive Activities Control Bd., 367 U.S. 1 (1961); Adler v. Bd. of Educ., 342 U.S. 485 (1952); Barenblatt v. United States, 360 U.S. 109 (1949).

⁵³ See, e.g., Yates v. United States, 354 U.S. 298 (1957) (narrowly construing the Smith Act); Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444 (1969) (rejecting the Dennis version of clear and present danger); Elfbrandt v. Russell, 384 U.S. 11 (1966) (holding unconstitutional anti-Communist loyalty oath for public employees).

Justice. In this capacity, he played a central role in enforcing the Espionage Act of 1917. Four decades later, reflecting on his own experience, O’Brian cautioned against the “emotional excitement engendered . . . during a war,” and warned that “the greatest danger to our institutions” may rest, not in the threat of subversion, but “in our own weaknesses in yielding” to wartime anxiety and our “readiness to . . . disregard the fundamental rights of the individual.” He expressed the hope that “our judges will in the end establish principles reaffirming” our nation’s commitment to civil liberties.⁵⁴

As Chief Justice Rehnquist has written, “[i]t is all too easy to slide from a case of genuine military necessity . . . to one where the threat is not critical and the power [sought to be exercised is] either dubious or nonexistent.”⁵⁵ It is, he added, “both desirable and likely that more careful attention will be paid by the courts to the . . . government’s claims of necessity as a basis for curtailing civil liberty.”⁵⁶

This Court has a profound responsibility to help guide our nation in the extraordinary circumstances of wartime. It has been said that in such circumstances the Court may grant too much deference to the other branches of government to avoid inadvertently hindering the war effort.⁵⁷ Korematsu and Dennis are examples of this phenomenon.

But the lesson of those decisions is not that this Court should abdicate its responsibility. It is, rather, ⁵⁴ John Lord O’Brian, New Encroachments on Individual Freedom, 66 Harv L Rev 1, 3-4, 26 (1952). See John Lord O’Brian, Changing Attitudes toward Freedom, 9 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 157 (1952).

⁵⁵ Rehnquist, supra note 12, at 224.

⁵⁶ Id., at 225.

⁵⁷ See id., at 222.

that the Court should bring to its responsibility an even deeper commitment to preserving the liberties for which this nation has fought. The Court's confident exercise of that responsibility is essential to enabling our nation to strike the right balance in times of crisis.

This Court should make clear that the United States adheres to the rule of law even in wartime, and that even in wartime the United States respects the principle that individuals may not be deprived of their liberty except for appropriate justifications that are demonstrated in fair hearings, in which they can be tested with the assistance of counsel.

This Court should make clear that, even in wartime, the United States does not abandon fundamental liberties in the absence of convincing military necessity. Our failure to hold ourselves to this standard in the past has led to many of our most painful episodes as a nation. We should not make that mistake again.

CONCLUSION

The petitions for writs of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

Geoffrey R. Stone
David A. Strauss
Stephen J. Schulhofer